Four winners were announced during the recent 2017 Henry Bellmon awards, put on by Sustainable Tulsa and the Rotary Club of South Tulsa.

Winners were The Pencil Box for the Quality of Life Award, Dry Cleaning Station with the Responsible Economic Growth Award, Tulsa City-County Library with the Environmental Stewardship Award and Tulsa Hub with the 2017 Henry Bellmon Sustainability Award.

The Pencil Box is reducing waste by getting supplies and reusable items into classrooms in underrepresented schools. The Dry Cleaning Station uses GreenEarth solvent and other non-toxic products during the dry cleaning process to reducing its impact on the environment.

Tulsa City-County Library transformed the Central Library, implementing the use of energy efficient systems that include solar panels, rainwater storage, light and water sensors. Tulsa Hub offers a Community Bicycling Workshop that teaches residents about sustainability and improves personal and environmental health.

$3.95 a month: The new cost for doing business in Tulsa.

C-K&W Supply celebrates 60 years

Company started as one-man shop in a garage

BY LARRY KERRICK, SENIOR
For the Tulsa Business & Legal News

A Tulsa construction supply company is going forward.

C-K&W Supply celebrated its 60th anniversary this week. Originally a one-man tool store in a garage, the company has since expanded to a multi-generational family business in 1942. It has the company more than 100,000 customers, sales and services from $50 million.

Part of the second generation to own C-K&W Supply is Steve Hester. Hester grew up in the business, going from playing in the back room to buying equipment as a child to starting to run the business now.

"It's really exciting," Hester said about the company's 60th anniversary. "When I came into the business all by myself, I graduated from the University of Tulsa. I had started out at our construction bank, then my father-in-law, all the way I grew up learning my parents and always in the water. So it's really exciting, something right."

Along with the excitement about the 60th anniversary, Hester brought in history to the 60th anniversary of the local profile to mark the anniversary this week. Hester and his business, company owner and president Steve Hester, have also put up a display board highlighting
