Pausing several times to compose herself, Holocaust survivor Eva Unterman told in great detail Thursday night the horrors and suffering she and her family endured in Nazi ghettos and concentration camps during World War II.

And she told about the love, sacrifice and resourcefulness of her parents and others that enabled them to survive.

Some 1,000 people crowded into B'nai Emunah Synagogue, many of them sitting in aisles or standing in the back, for Tulsa's 18th annual Yom Hashoah Interfaith Holocaust Commemoration, an event Unterman founded and organized but had never addressed as the keynote speaker.

It was a story she has told many times before, but this time, she said, she included details she had never told publicly.

Unterman was 7 in 1940 when she and her parents and grandmothers were herded into a Nazi-run ghetto in their home town of Lodz, Poland. They were liberated from a concentration camp by Russian troops on May 18, 1945, the last day of the war in Europe, after five cruel years of starvation, deprivation and humiliation.

Unterman said that for most of her life, all she knew of her story was what she remembered.

Among those memories was being too sick at one camp to stand up for roll call, propped up between her mother and another woman who both knew if she collapsed, she would be killed.

And later at the same camp, feeling the steel grip of her mother's hand on her arm, warning her to be silent, as her grandmother volunteered to mend socks for two young SS officers in exchange for bread.

The men took her grandmother out and shot her for entertainment.

"One of them came back laughing. I can still hear that laugh," she said.

"To this day I'm convinced she did it because she wanted to give the bread to me."

Unterman said she began to piece together her story on a trip to Dresden, Germany, in 2002.

There she met other survivors who had worked with her at a Dresden munitions factory and found copies of documents that included her name and her parents' names. More trips to Germany, Poland and the Czech Republic, and time with researchers at the Yad Vashem, the Holocaust museum in Jerusalem, filled in the details.

When she finished talking, the audience stood for an extended ovation.

Rabbi Dan Kaiman of B'nai Emunah said the Shoah (Holocaust) was an "implicit and explicit" part of the discussion throughout his life. He said he was there to honor his grandfather, soon to be 90, who survived the Holocaust and lost many family members.

Rabbi Marc Fitzerman of B'nai Emunah led a candle-lighting ceremony in memory of the murdered children of Lodz. Among the candle lighters were Unterman and two of her grandchildren, Phoebe Unterman and Sophie Unterman.

Unterman lit a candle in memory of Dawid Sierakowiak, who died of starvation and disease on Aug. 8, 1943, a young man she remembers as her Hebrew tutor in the ghetto.

Tulsa's Yom Hashoah Interfaith Holocaust Commemoration is sponsored by the Tulsa Council for Holocaust Education and the Tulsa City-County Library.
