Wendy Corsi Staub, author of such best-selling suspense novels as "Nightwatcher," "The Last to Know" and "The Good Sister," will be in Tulsa on Tuesday to talk about her multi-faceted writing career.

Staub will be at the Hardesty Regional Library's Frossard Auditorium, 8316 E. 93rd St. The event begins at 7 p.m., and admission is free.

Staub has written more than 25 suspense novels under her own name, and she has also published a number of top-selling, award-winning romance novels under the name Wendy Markham.

Staub grew up in a large, close-knit family in rural southwestern New York State and decided she wanted to become an author while in third grade.

After stints as a book editor for a Manhattan publishing house and an account coordinator for a major advertising agency, she sold her first novel, the supernatural young adult thriller, "Summer Lightning."

Staub has written books in various genres including suspense, horror, historical and contemporary romance, television and movie tie-in, and biography. She also co-authored a mystery series with the late New York City mayor Ed Koch and has ghost-written for a number of best-selling authors and celebrities.

A book signing will follow her presentation. Books will be available for purchase, courtesy of

Bill would fund Tulsa VA clinic

A spending agreement includes $17 million for a proposed Veterans Administration clinic in Tulsa.

BY JEFFREY WILSON
 The Oklahoma and Tulsa area's Veterans Administration (VA) is set to receive $17 million from the federal government to build a new clinic in Tulsa, according to a spending agreement between the state and the VA. The agreement, which is part of a larger deal between the state and the VA, is expected to be signed in the next few weeks. The new clinic is expected to be completed by the end of the year and will provide a range of services to veterans in the Tulsa area.
